We'll cover everything from where to buy a Red-Eyed Tree Frog to its unique care requirements, temperament, and potential health issues.

Where to Buy a Red-Eyed Tree Frog

Reputable breeders are the best source for healthy and well-cared-for Red-Eyed Tree Frogs. Before purchasing, inquire about the frog's diet, environment, and any health conditions. Avoid buying frogs from unknown origins or pet stores with questionable practices.

Online marketplaces can also connect you with breeders and hobbyists, but exercise caution when making purchases remotely. Verify the seller's reputation, ask for references, and request detailed photos or videos of the frog before sending payment.

Types of Red-Eyed Tree Frogs

There are three recognized subspecies of Red-Eyed Tree Frogs:

- Our Book Librarian Red-Eyed Tree Frog (A. callidryas callidryas): The most well-known variety, with bright red eyes and a green body.
- Common Red-Eyed Tree Frog (A. callidryas spectabilis): Similar to the Our Book Librarian subspecies, but with a slightly smaller size and often more yellow coloration.
- Panamanian Red-Eyed Tree Frog (A. callidryas plicata): The rarest subspecies, characterized by its smaller size, brown-tinted eyes, and distinctive folds on its skin.

Housing and Environment

Red-Eyed Tree Frogs require a spacious enclosure that meets their arboreal lifestyle. A vertical tank or terrarium with ample height is ideal, providing ample space for climbing and hiding.

- Size: Minimum dimensions of 18" x 18" x 24" for a single frog, with additional space for additional frogs.
- Substrate: Use a moisture-retentive substrate such as coconut fiber, orchid bark, or sphagnum moss.
- Plants: Provide dense foliage for hiding and climbing, such as live plants (e.g., bromeliads, ferns) or artificial plants.
- Humidity: Maintain humidity levels between 60% and 80% using a hygrometer and regular misting.
- Temperature: Keep temperatures between 70-80°F (21-27°C) with a gradient to allow for thermoregulation.
- Lighting: Provide UVA/UVB light for 10-12 hours per day, and use a timer to regulate light cycles.

Feeding

Red-Eyed Tree Frogs are primarily insectivores. Offer a variety of live insects, such as crickets, mealworms, and fruit flies. Feed them twice a week, providing a variety of sizes to accommodate their changing appetite.

- Juveniles: Feed daily with small insects.
- Adults: Feed twice a week with larger insects.
- Supplements: Dust insects with calcium and vitamin D3 supplements regularly.

Temperament and Behavior

Red-Eyed Tree Frogs are generally docile and tolerant of handling. However, they can be territorial and may exhibit aggressive behavior towards other frogs of the same species.

- Solitary: They are not social animals and prefer to live alone.
- Nocturnal: They are most active at night and spend the day resting.
- Arboreal: They are skilled climbers and prefer to spend most of their time in trees.

Cost

The cost of a Red-Eyed Tree Frog varies depending on its age, size, and subspecies. Expect to pay between $50 and $200 for a healthy specimen from a reputable breeder.

In addition to the initial Free Download cost, factor in expenses for the enclosure, lighting, humidity control, and food. Monthly expenses can range from $50 to $100, depending on the size of the enclosure and the number of frogs.

Health

Regular veterinary check-ups and proper care can help keep Red-Eyed Tree Frogs healthy and happy. Common health issues include:

- Bacterial infections: Can be treated with antibiotics.
- Fungal infections: Can be treated with antifungal medications.
- Nutritional deficiencies: Provide a balanced diet and supplement as needed.

- Parasites: Deworming treatments may be necessary.
- Metabolic bone disease: Caused by calcium deficiency, can be prevented by providing proper lighting and supplements.

Red-Eyed Tree Frogs are captivating and unique pets that can bring joy to your life for many years to come. By providing them with the proper care, environment, and diet, you can ensure their well-being and create a harmonious home for these fascinating creatures.
