About the Book

Iannis Xenakis (1922-2001) was a Greek-French composer, architect, and mathematician who revolutionized the world of music through innovative compositions and groundbreaking architectural designs. His unique blend of music, mathematics, and architecture has inspired generations of artists and scholars.

In this captivating biography, author Jonathan Cross explores the extraordinary life and work of Xenakis. Drawing on extensive research and interviews with Xenakis's family, friends, and colleagues, Cross paints a vivid portrait of a musical pioneer who pushed the boundaries of artistic expression.

From his early years in Greece to his studies at the Paris Conservatory, Xenakis's journey was marked by innovation and experimentation. He embraced electronic music and stochastic processes, creating soundscapes that were both haunting and exhilarating. His architectural designs, such as the Philips Pavilion at the 1958 Brussels World's Fair, combined aesthetics with structural ingenuity.

"Xenakis: His Life in Music" is a must-read for anyone interested in music, architecture, or the intersection of art and science. It is a testament to the power of human imagination and the transformative impact of creativity.
